Three-Fifths of All,

"Three-Fifths of the 30,000,000 children in the United States are rural children. What are the facts as to rural child welfare? They are not known. But it is noteworthy that the percentage of filterary in pural communities, according to the 1910 census, is double that in cities. Where the rural child listor is great, the percentage of child illiteracy is high. The juvenile delinquency laws on the statute books of most of the bureau reports a vear of activity in dealing with eight different part of those states because rural probation officers are lacking; and the figures of correctional institutions show that the country is largely represented.

"Time and money are required to resented.

"Time and money are required to secure the facts about the physical, social and economic conditions surrounding rural children, but these conditions must be understood if we are to be sure that we are making progress in securing a fair chance for every child."
